

Handwritten text in Arabic script, likely a commentary or treatise. The text is densely packed and includes several red-inked headings and sub-headings. The script is in a cursive style typical of classical Arabic manuscripts. The text appears to be a detailed explanation of a subject, possibly related to law or philosophy, given the nature of the headings and the structure of the paragraphs.

Handwritten text in Arabic script, continuing the commentary or treatise from the left page. The text is densely packed and includes several red-inked headings and sub-headings. The script is in a cursive style typical of classical Arabic manuscripts. The text appears to be a detailed explanation of a subject, possibly related to law or philosophy, given the nature of the headings and the structure of the paragraphs.