

Handwritten Arabic text in a dense, cursive script, likely a manuscript or a collection of letters. The text is arranged in columns across the pages, with some lines written in a larger, bolder hand. The script is highly stylized and characteristic of the Maghrebi or Andalusian dialects. The pages are filled with text, with some marginalia and corrections visible. The ink is dark, and the paper shows signs of age and wear.